Patients who are admitted to the hospital for treatment of medical problems sometimes get other serious injuries, complications, or conditions, and may even die. Some patients may experience problems soon after they are discharged and need to be admitted to the hospital again. These events can often be prevented if hospitals follow best practices for treating patients.

Death from treatable serious complications

Sometimes after surgery, patients can develop serious complications while they are in the hospital. They might catch pneumonia, have a heart attack, or lose function in their kidneys or liver. These problems are serious but can be treated by a good hospital team. If the hospital doesn't manage the patient's complications correctly, the patient could die.

This number represents the number of surgical patients that died for every 1,000 people who had a serious treatable complication after surgery. For details on sources, click here.

What safer hospitals do:

The staff communicates well to quickly identify if there is a serious complication after surgery. They are ready to take action with an aggressive plan using patient safety guidelines.

Key Takeaways

1

Your public reputation is consumed by demographically disparate groups of people. Your results are updated constantly with or without your knowledge.

2

Your public reputation depends largely upon your performance in several key federal reporting programs.

3

Reporting programs feed into the public reputation websites but each website has data from different timeframes.

4

The data your patients see may not be an accurate reflection of your hospital's performance.

5

Working with your quality team to proactively monitor and improve your performance is the only way to improve your online publicly reported reputation.
